An abandoned mosque near Rehov Straus behind the Histadrut building, which the Wakf is now demanding be returned.

Mosque Control

Following up on Palestinian official Faisal Hussein's claim that 70 percent of the western side of Jerusalem belongs to the Palestinians, the Wakf is now calling for the return of 10 abandoned mosques in the city which are located in the middle of Jewish neighborhoods. The mosques were abandoned following the War of Independence, when Arab residents fled western Jerusalem, as it came under Israeli control. They are located in Rehavia, Ma'ha, Bin Kerem, the City Center (behind the Histadrut building), and Ma'milla. Wakf Director Adnan Hussein put forward the demand. "We want a return of the mosques to Palestinian control. We want to be able to repair them, make them suitable for prayer and tourist sites. Any Moslem should be able to visit them." Jerusalem Director-General Ilan Chohon dismissed the new demand as just another propaganda effort to establish Palestinian property claims in advance of negotiations on the political future of the city. "The Palestinian claim has no basis whatsoever. The City of Jerusalem and the Religious Affairs Ministry take care of all the holy sites of every religious group in the city," he said. (S.L.)

The Big Bust

Steve Leibowitz

The arrest of 45 members of an eastern Jerusalem based Hamas cell in recent days has hurt, but not crushed the terrorist group. This is the view of senior security officials who say that most of those arrested were relatively small pawns in the Hamas organizational structure. Particularly distressing to the General Security Services, is the knowledge that a reorganization of local Hamas is already underway, "in an effort to replace those who have been neutralized."

The 45 Hamas members were actually divided into five separate cells, each led by members of the Hamas military wing Izzadin Kassam. Security officials point out that only a few group leaders were uncovered. The major catch was identified as Mahmoud Dayev, also known as Ahmed Haled. Dayev was considered to be the man responsible for planning last October's kidnap-murder of Sgt. Nachshon Wachsmann. Also arrested was Wakf employee Riyadh Dane, an Imam of the Al-Aksa Mosque on the Temple Mount. Two cell leaders were identified as Iman Fadar - a Jerusalem taxi driver living in Abu Dis, and Musa Alma - a garage owner from Ras al-Amud.

The bust was a combined operation of the GSS, the Jerusalem Police and the IDF Central Command following months of intelligence.

DRIVING AT A DISADVANTAGE

Safe driving depends on good vision. It has been estimated that some 90 percent of driving decisions are based on vision. As changes in your vision are often gradual and imperceptible, you may be unaware that you are driving at a disadvantage. The only way to find out if your vision is good enough for safe driving is to have them examined periodically. A thorough examination will test for ALL the necessary skills. There's much more to it than visual acuity (being able to read the eye chart).

For safe driving, you also need good peripheral vision, the ability to "see out of the corner of your eye." Depth perception, the ability to judge objects, your coordination, the ability to focus both eyes at the same object quickly and easily, and accommodation, the ability to change focus from near to far and vice versa. If you haven't had your eyes examined recently, isn't it about time you did? You owe it to yourself, and everyone else on the road.

Dear Editor

On The Missionary Trail...

As a Danish Christian and theologian on sabbatical leave in Jerusalem, I am challenged by Torah Mitzvah Foundation founder Mordechai Israel's methods. I would like to add the following to Mission Impossible? (U, March 26), "pretending" I were an anti-semitic in Denmark using Mr. Israel's methods and terminology:

● I and 120 people make video and audio tapes of the Jews, especially Danish converts to Judaism. I notify all the neighbors that Mr. X is a Jew. I put letters in mailboxes.

● On several occasions I have gone to X's employers and asked that the Jew be fired. In one instance the employer didn't want to fire the Jew. I told him that there would be protests outside his store. He then fired the Jew.

● I have been extremely effective. We never close a file on a Jew. They will all be brought to justice. We are now drawing up a veritable who's who list of Jews in Denmark.

Now, I am not Mordechai Israel. If I were acting like him in my country, I would be brought to court. In my country it is against the law to fire people on religious grounds. Is that really allowed in Israel, the only democratic state in the Middle East?

Does Israeli law allow someone like Mordechai Israel to incite an employer to fire a worker on religious grounds? And even if it is within the law, is it in the spirit of the declaration of independence?

Dr. Kaj Kjaer-Hansen

In principle I understand the law concerning missionization and I understand the fears of the Orthodox community in Israel regarding the supposed "Christianization" of Jewish people. However, what distressed me beyond belief was the gleeful claims of the leader of the Torah Mitzvah Foundation in his hounding and victimization of a man working in Mea She'arim and getting him fired in the name of justice. Whose justice? I had to ask myself: "What are we, what are we becoming?" Is this the country that we live in that was set up to be a homeland for the Jewish people, a land where after 2,000 years of persecution we have the right to live freely and believe freely. Has this country become a police state, being run by those who are acting no differently to those who have persecuted our people for the last 2,000 years?

Name withheld

Mission Impossible? reflects a religious prejudice and bad taste reminiscent of the dark days of the Spanish Inquisition.

In a democratic country, anyone who confessed that he or his organization "go to the employer and ask that the missionary be fired" and threaten to take away his kashrut certificate, would be considered to have committed criminal action. If the Israeli population stands silent and does not reprimand such attitudes and actions, this dark spirit will not stop with Christians and Messianic Jews.

Zionist Christians and Messianic Jews have a great love and support of the Jewish people and the State of Israel. The people and organizations who fight against Messianic Jews and call for vigilante action ought not to imagine that their cause is a blessing. Much to our regret, there are still anti-semitic Christians in the world. When they read articles like this their hate towards all Jews is fueled. I appeal to Jews everywhere not to allow the same prejudice and hate that we have suffered for so many centuries to become our daily bread in the Land of Israel. Joseph Shulman

What's At Steak?

I was amazed to perceive the equanimous tone in Giti Landau's article Where the Beef Is (U, May 26). Her description of the so-called kashrut supervision provided by the Committee for Traditional Observance, is a travesty of all that is precious to Torah and tradition. The basis of any kashrut supervision is "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom" (Psalms 111:10). How can any kashrut organization certify the kashrut of food while it is cooked on the Shabbat before the very eyes of the so-called kashrut supervisors?

According to the article, the head of this supervision is a Tuvia Movshovitz, who was a student of Rabbi Eliezer Schach. It is a shame that his mentors did not encourage him to also attain a secular education and profession. That way Movshovitz could today be gainfully employed instead of disgracing that which has sustained the Jewish people throughout the millenniums.

Kohl's Capital Visit

German Chancellor Helmut Kohl laid a wreath in the Hall of Remembrance at Yad Vashem on Tuesday (pictured), as part of his visit to the capital. The Holocaust Museum was Kohl's first stop after an official reception held for him at the Knesset. Following his visit, Kohl told reporters, "We feel terrible as human beings. I can only be full of shame about what has been done in the name of Germany."

Shabbat Roads

The Municipal Committee on Shabbat Road Closures is expected to submit its findings and recommendations in the coming days. Committee chairman Eliezer Strum announced that each of the committee members were free to submit ideas, which he began receiving on Wednesday.

The committee is studying the question of Shabbat travel on the following streets: Bar-Ilan, Malchei Yisrael, Brandels, all roads in Har Nof, Michlin, Yam Suf and two small streets in Ramot and Givat Shaul. Most committee members favor the closure of streets in Har Nof, with the exception of cars of the few secular residents living in the neighborhood. Strum also indicated that the final recommendation on Bar-Ilan Street could take a number of weeks due to the complexity surrounding the issue.

Amit Stripped of Power

Mayor Olmert not only stripped Meshulam Amit of his deputy mayor's position, but also took away all his other positions of power, after Amit filed police complaints and the Supreme Court injunctions against Olmert. Amit was removed as chairman of committees dealing with firefighting, emergency services, security, public tenders and the war against drugs. He was also removed from the all-important finance committee.

Homeless to Talpior

The Social Welfare Ministry is opening its first residency for the capital's homeless youth in Talpior. A similar project was recently begun in Tel Aviv. The Jerusalem center will house tens of needy youth who have no roof over their heads. The facility is expected to become operational within a few months.

Where Are You?

Mayor Olmert has ordered city Director-General Ilan Cohen to keep tabs on absenteeism of city council members, especially those who are paid deputy mayors. The action resulted from a council motion put forward by One Jerusalem's Yisrael Shulderman, who claimed that paid deputy mayors were too often absent from key committee meetings. The past two years have been especially stressful – with an upsurge in terrorism and the specter of uncertainty hanging over the nation.

In light of this, AMIT Women is devoting this year's annual seminar/supper to "The Age of Anxiety: Coping Strategies." Built around seven workshops, the seminar/supper, scheduled for Sunday afternoon, June 18 at the Geshet Center, will focus on various aspects of living with anxiety and fears, and practical ways of dealing with them. Key-note speaker Naomi Yoeli, a clinical psychologist with the Israeli Air Force and a former fellow of the Menniger Clinic on post-traumatic stress, will speak on "Living with Terror: Striking a Delicate Balance." The event is being co-chaired by Elana Rozenman of SuccessWorks and Public Relations Consultant Sara Averick.

"This is our fourth annual seminar," explains Helene Isaacs of AMIT Women. "We held our organizational meeting right after Beit Lid and decided to focus this seminar on anxiety and terrorism."

AMIT Women is the largest women's religious Zionist organization in the United States. In Israel, the organization sponsors the only government-appointed network for religious secondary

The Age of Anxiety

Israel has been a living laboratory for coping with stress. Wars, terrorism, the trauma of the Holocaust, mass immigration – all these have been piled on top of the day-to-day pressures. AMIT Women are doing something about it.

technological education. In addition, it supports innovative children's homes and youth villages throughout the country which have been instrumental in revolutionizing child care in Israel.

Dr. Naomi Abramowitz, a psychiatric social worker and the director of the psychotherapy program at Bar Ilan's School of Social Work, will be leading one of two workshops on the topic "How Terror Affects our Daily Lives." The other workshop will be led by Vivien Auerbach, a social worker/counselor specializing in group and private practice.

"We will be looking at what people are anxious about," Abramowitz notes. "How do we live with ambiguities, with uncertainties? To what extent do we change life patterns to avoid what is uncertain and may never come? We will also be exploring the conflict between safety and ideology. We are an immigrant group of women who came to this country with marvelous ideals. Some of us find ourselves frightened of doing things. Where is the balance between idealism and being realistic?"

"We will be exploring people's reactions to situations like terrorism," Auerbach states. "When something out of the ordinary happens, we don't know how to deal with it. We become stressed and feel we don't have the resources to deal successfully with the new situation. The workshop will work on getting participants to realize what resources they have by clarifying coping mechanisms."

School psychologist and family therapist Naomi Mirvis will be dealing with "Handling Children's Fears at Home and at School." She will be offering specific techniques for parents to cope with their own fears and thereby reduce their children's stress.

"Conflicting Values in Fear-Filled Times," is the title of the workshop to be given by family therapist Fran Ackerman. "The workshop will be exploring how one clarifies contradictions. We all have conflicting values. We want our children to be independent and open to people. Yet we know there is a need for caution. The workshop will be looking at various mechanisms we can use to resolve these conflicts."

Lorell Blass, a social worker at Bar Ilan and the Hebrew University, will be looking at "Suddenly They are Soldiers: Fear/Pride." "As olim, we didn't have the experience abroad of having to send our sons, husbands and brothers off to the army. We will be talking about how it is to live with the feelings that our children are now outside of our control. How do we deal with our fears?"

Psychologist Dr. Giselle Cywicz, an Auschwitz survivor and counselor for Amcha, will be giving a workshop on "The Response of Holocaust Survivors and Children of Survivors to Terrorism." Cywicz claims that while there may not be a clear line connecting the Holocaust experience to other terrible experiences such as terrorism, "the Holocaust is so much a part of our total consciousness that we can't see the world from another perspective. I will be dealing with practical ways of coping. For the most part, we must go on living, and this has to be the focus."

Family and marital therapist Ruth Bronznick will focus on "Consciousness Raising: Issues and Emotions." She will lead an experiential workshop, which will enable each one of the participants to get in touch with his innermost thoughts. "We will explore similar feelings and patterns and how to cope with becoming bogged down in guilt, anger and hatred."

Devorah Gershinsky, who holds a masters in counseling and worked for 10 years in the US in a phobic clinic, will be presenting "Coping Strategies." Gershinsky will be teaching guided imagery, a technique she has successfully used in her cancer support group here in Jerusalem, to help participants cope with anxieties and fears. "This is a hands-on technique for relaxing and lowering anxieties that has been used in stress management in industry and in schools. It allows the individual to take control of body and mind. Everyone is anxious today and these techniques do help."

No Room At The Mall

Two well-known American businesses have been turned down from opening stores in the Canton Yerushalayim due to lack of space. Toys R Us asked for a 2,000-meter lot which could not be approved. Also disappointed was Blockbuster Video, whose request was tabled after a suitable location in the mall could not be found.

Tower Records has chosen not to open its Jerusalem branch in the mall. Instead, the music store will open in the center of town on Hillel Street. The planned 430 square meter store will become the largest of its type in the city.

Improving Your Lingo

Junior high school students now have a new method for learning English. The Linguatich Language Institute, currently conducting a pilot course at the Dekel Vilnaye Junior High School in Ma'ale Adumim, will expand its services by offering courses this summer for the first time.

The Linguatich method gives the student a series of computer-based vocabulary lessons, twice a week, under the supervision of a certified English teacher. The sessions are given at Linguatich's learning center in Talpiot.

No-Show

Mayor Ehud Olmert and Jeru-

Safety First

A recent meeting of the Municipal Administration, authorized the dispatch of NIS 500,000 for road repairs.

In addition, Deputy Mayor Shmuel Shkedel, who holds the city's transportation portfolio, detailed current programs underway to increase traffic safety.

"Operation Bicycles" is being conducted in conjunction with the National Council for the Prevention of Accidents, Police Department and Transportation Ministry. It includes stricter enforcement of traffic laws pertaining to bicycles, standard bicycle inspections and safety lectures in schools.

Signs will be erected at dangerous intersections informing drivers of the number of injuries inflicted through accidents at the areas in hopes to increase awareness.

In addition, a task force will be formed to investigate all accidents in Jerusalem and propose ways to improve safety.

Gateway to Old City

An ancient gate to the Old City has recently been reopened. The gate, which dates back to the 13th century, will become a new foot path into the Old City next to the Dung Gate. The gate is two meters high and 1.5 meters wide. Under the gate remains were found of the Cardo road dating back to Roman times.

also contended that even when they do show up, it's often simply to be listed in the protocol before leaving the meeting without taking part in its deliberations.

Mayor Lauds Ateret HaCohanim

"Today more than ever, it's important to support the work of Ateret HaCohanim." That was Mayor Olmert's message to those gathered at the annual dinner of the Old City Jewish settlement organization held last week in New York. Some 1,000 contributors attended the dinner, which raised close to $1 million.

Hi-Tech Profits

The hi-tech industrial area of Har Hotzvim is the most profitable industrial center in the city. This, according to statistics released this week by the Jerusalem Industrialists' Association, which lists Har Hotzvim's gross income as NIS 1.1 billion in 1994. The other three moneymaking areas are: Talpiot, Givat Shaul and Atarot with a combined gross income of NIS 1.06 billion.

The premiere, which took place in the Mann Auditorium in Tel Aviv featured a one-time performance by the Prague Symphony Orchestra and male choir, conducted by Eli Yaffe and a performance by Hassidic singer Avraham Fried.

President Ezer Weizman, Chief Rabbi Yisrael Lau, Tel Aviv Mayor Ronnie Milo and Jerusalem Mayor Ehud Olmert were in attendance. The concert series will head to New York, Los Angeles, London, Paris and Antwerp with the grand finale to be held in Jerusalem.

Nothing But The Tooth...

A toughening of rules regarding the number of dental chairs and the presence of a dental specialist in the clinic almost caused the closure of the Dental Volunteers For Israel clinic, founded by Trudi Birger for disadvantaged children in Jerusalem.

The clinic, located on Me'or Hayim Street, has been operating for 15 years, and hosts about 10 volunteer dentists a month from all over the world. Volunteers serve between two weeks and a month, and treat disadvantaged children for free.

Health Minister Dr. Ephraim Saeh (pictured with Birger and a patient) recently visited the clinic, which operates mainly on contributions from overseas donors, and recommended an increase in government donations and gave them a license to operate six dental units – which will meet the facility's needs.

"I believe it was the government's responsibility to take such an initiative. Now we will not have to reduce the number of patients who can come to our clinic," Birger told in Jerusalem.

Jerusalem's Link to Cyberspace

Just across the street from the Hypercol in Talpiot, Jerusalem's cyberspace revolution is taking place. It's the temporary home of NetMedia, the first Jerusalem company licensed to market setup connections to Internet, the worldwide computer communications network.

Some 30-40 million people already have access to Internet in more than 100 countries. In Israel, the trend has taken off. Licenses were granted to commercial companies from June, 1994 but the technical facilities prevented marketing of home and corporate links to the system until recent months.

Jerusalem's NetMedia officially opened its doors for business on June 1. Hardly computer geeks, the three owners of NetMedia are hardcore businessmen and new immigrants. Shalom Menora came on aliyah moving to Har Nof in October after selling his interest in successful real estate and investment ventures in Chicago. After studying in a yoshiva for a while, he began checking out business opportunities and kept running into future partner Avi Moskowitz. Moskowitz sold out his medical systems business in Staten Island and now rents a house in Efrat. He had been an avid Internet user and actually came on aliyah with the assistance of an Internet mailing list called "Tachlis." Investor Elliot Jacobs moved to Har Nof from New Jersey but continues to manage his real estate business in the US.

The three partners say they have each invested significant amounts of their own money in NetMedia and believe they are in the right place at the right time. Moskowitz told Jerusalem, "There is incredible potential and right now we are about six months to a year behind the US. But there, the market is flooded and requires massive capitalization."

Menora looks at Internet as the great new pastime and work tool that many will not be able to do without. "Television is passive. But interactive computers takes the mind and imagination in new directions."

Even without advertising, NetMedia has started signing up and installing about 10-15 new clients per day. They now have some 200 subscribers, but once they start marketing, they expect it will grow by 500-1000 subscribers per month. They won't be limited to Jerusalem, and already have a communications point in Tel Aviv, and plan further points in Haifa, Ra'anana, Beersheba, Elat and Rehovot.

Moskowitz says the number of potential subscribers is limitless. The individual home user "dial-up line" is not the only target group. There is also "corporate connectivity," where companies are able to provide E-mail and Internet to all employees.

Yes, Prime Minister

David Shaw

The phone rang mid-morning. "Is that you, Dave?"

"Yes." "Bob Hawke, here, Dave. Got your name from the blokes in the press gallery."

It certainly sounded like Hawke. You remember him. Prime Minister of Australia for nine years until the party threw him out. A great friend of Israel from the days when he ran the Australian equivalent of the Histadrut.

"What can I do for you, er - Bob?"

His voice dropped to a conspiratorial level.

"About this job, Dave? Prime Minister. Is it true you can just run yourself, a personal candidate. Direct elections and all that?"

"Quite true."

"And they can only throw you

"About this job, Dave? Prime Minister. Is it true you can just run yourself, a personal candidate. Direct elections and all that?"

out with a two-thirds majority."

"True again, Bob."

"Marvelous. You know what they did to me here, don't you?" His voice became more strident. "Knife in the back, that's what it was. Played the numbers game on me. Useless blunders. Never would have got into power without me and then they crucified me. Tell you what, Dave. I'll be in Melbourne, tomorrow. Fix up a few things. Got lots of friends there. Rabbis and so on. Conversion and whadya call it, Aleeya? Listen, you form a political party. I'll get hold of money. She'll be apples. I'll get back to you."

The phone went dead. Before I could collect my thoughts, it rang again. A polite English voice. "Hullo. House of Lords and - um - Ladies, here. Am I speaking to Mr. Shaw?" I identified myself and there was a pause.

"Ah, Shaw! Thatcher here. I've had good reports about you and I need your assistance."

"Oh, yes - Lady Thatcher." "Very interesting situation, there, I'm informed. Leadership crisis. I'm told you have this completely new system which relies on the total personal attractiveness of the candidate for Prime Minister."

"That's about right, m'Lady." "Don't be vague, Shaw. No shilly-shallying. As I understand it, they want somebody whose ability to lead is simply beyond question and this will be decided directly by the public. No stupid political paraphernalia."

"Correct, Mag - um - Ma'am." There was a pause before she went on.

"I must say, I am amazed. Why hasn't someone thought of this before. The trouble it would have saved me." She sighed and there was a little pause but then I could feel steel resolve jumping into place again.

"Now Shaw, the Prime Minister will form her own government and give her own directions for the running of the country, working in harness with the conservative party. Correct?"

"Indubitably, Lady Thatcher." "And the conservatives, what are they called?"

"The Likud, ma'am. There are some other conservatives."

"Oh yes. I remember now. Mr. Shamir, such a colorful little man."

"No longer the leader, Lady Thatcher. It's now a Mr. Netanyahu."

"Mr. Netanyahu...? Shaw, I want you to see him and tell him where I stand. Since I was betrayed in this country, the conservatives have driven steadily downhill, as I so clearly predicted. I should be glad to leave before complete disaster is achieved. I want your report on one sheet of paper faxed to me by 0730 GMT tomorrow morning. Do I make myself clear?"

And I heard her voice saying faintly, "What a wonderful idea," before the phone went dead again.

The Big Bust

gence gathering on Hamas activities in the capital. The terrorist operatives were uncovered all over the eastern side of the city with arrests made in the Old City, the neighborhood of A-Tor, and the villages of Abu Dis, Ras al-Amud, Sur Bahir and Azariya.

According to security officials, they had to move in at this point, because the terrorists had reached an advanced stage in planning a series of major attacks, including a powerful car bomb in the city center; sniping at soldiers manning IDF roadblocks at the outskirts of the city; stabbing armed Jews in the Old City, and hijacking a bus and holding hostages with a demand for the release of Hamas security prisoners.

The car bomb plan was certainly the most murderous scheme foiled by the security forces. During interrogation of arrested cell members, it emerged that the plan was not carried out only because the car bomb, which was to have been constructed in the Gaza Strip, could not be brought into the city. The partial closure made it impossible to transfer the vehicle to Jerusalem without detection. One of those arrested was caught with the detonating device hidden in his car as he waited for the bomb-laden car to arrive from Gaza.

It is clear to security forces that all the cells' orders come from the Gaza Strip. The local cells' prime tasks were to store smuggled weapons and to scout out and report on potential targets as they waited for their orders to attack. One of the cells had actually sent out agents in an effort to kidnap a soldier, but returned empty-handed after failing to find an appropriate target.

On A Song & A Prayer

Robert Lederman's Pirchei Efrat boys choir was founded in 1992. In May 1993, they released their first album. The boys, aged 9-13 sang the original compositions of their musical director and conductor Robert Lederman. The album sold over 3,500 copies in Israel, UK and the US. The choir has been on the charts both on Arutz 7 and Kol Yisrael. They have broadcast live on Reshet Aleph and have performed together with Dudu Fisher and Yehuda Glatz on his new album, Na'ale.

This week the choir released its new album, Mimkomcha. The recording presents 10 original compositions by Robert Lederman. The release of the album comes hot on the heels of Pirchei Efrat's performance last Wednesday (pictured), at Gan Menora next to the Mashbir, in conjunction with the Gan Harmony Walk-A-Thon.

ACTION LINE

Readers with a gripe now have a corner to kvetch.

Oh Rats!

Kelly Hartog

Local Olivat Shaul resident Mr. X was taking his usual Shabbat stroll late last Friday night. Around 1 am he passed by the corner of Kanfei Nesharim and Akiva Azoulay streets, at the turnoff to the new Jerusalem-Tel Aviv Highway.

He noticed a large number of rats feeding off the garbage. At a nearby construction site, he discovered a youth who told him the rats were "no big deal" and someone had already reported them to the municipality.

Mr. X decided to contact the municipality anyway. He was told to speak with Ya'akov Breska who heads the extermination department, but only managed to contact his secretary. He was informed that he would have to pay for the removal of the rats himself. When he explained the rats were not in his home but were in the street he was told he had to provide the city with the exact address. Not having the exact address, Mr. X was unable to pursue the matter any further. At this point he contacted Action Line.

Action Line sent a letter from Mr. X to the municipality and received the following response:

On June 5, a rat problem on Kanfei Nesharim Street was dealt with by the municipal extermination staff. I cannot be sure that the problem cared for is the same as that mentioned in your letter, as the letter's author did not name any specific address.

In general: The municipality will take care of an existing rat problem in any private building in Jerusalem, though residents of the building in question will be charged for this service.

If there is a rat problem in a public building anywhere in the city, the municipality takes care of the problem free of charge.

In addition to their regular services, the extermination department provides preventative pest control services to the Jerusalem public free of charge. Municipal staff services each building in every neighborhood in the city once a year.

For further information, or pest control service, the public is welcome to contact the municipal extermination department at 314659.

Yoni Hashkes lacked one thing growing up: his own comic books. A meager allowance forced him to fulfill his favorite pastime at friends' homes or browsing bookstores. Those days, however, are long gone. Hashkes, 33, has recently founded Comics Express, a local business that caters to the comic lover.

"I had a choice of retiring, or doing something that people would really like," says Hashkes, a native New Yorker whose family made aliyah when he was seven. Upon selling his shares from two multimillion dollar companies he helped found - Magic Software Enterprises Ltd. and News Datacom - Hashkes sought a new direction. It was one of his daughters who ultimately provided the incentive for the unprecedented business. A comics addict who, like her father, thrived on reading the latest publications, she witnessed continuous obstacles in purchasing and receiving the comics. Lost faxes, late arrivals, and costly phone bills left Superman and friends somewhere en route between New York and Jerusalem. The frustrated 12-year-old suggested that her father open a business in Jerusalem.

"One morning, we just woke up, and two hours later, we had a company... You have to understand, I'm very impulsive," says Hashkes, whose favorite comics are Spiderman and Ironman.

Market research confirmed the young entrepreneur's suspicion; that comics could be purchased locally at a cheaper price than the current rate. Comics Express offers one comic for NIS 6.5 compared to NIS 11 elsewhere. Hashkes nonetheless insists that his primary motivation in opening Comics Express was not financial gain.

"I can afford to have a business

Yoni Hashkes and his "Superfriends" (alias: his kids).

Funny Business

that doesn't work out...I just wanted to create Comics Express to let people know what's happening in the comic world."

Comics Express distributes a variety of catalogs to the interested consumer who may then choose to order a specific comic. Working with distributors in New York, Hashkes expedites the orders, claiming the Israeli public will receive the comic at around the same time it hits the stands in the US.

Hashkes says 75 percent of his customers are Israeli, ranging in age from 15-40. "I have a feeling that some of the adults are bluffing. They call up, saying they're ordering for their kids, but I think they're embarrassed. They just want the comics for themselves." The most popular requests are Spiderman, X-Man and Superman.

Yet if the phone is ringing off the hook, Hashkes does not mind: he has lots of help - his family. "My family has been very isolated from me in the past due to my work. This is the first opportunity where everyone can get involved," says Hashkes, whose wife and three children assist in stuffing envelopes, answering phones and designing graphics. "The new rule for the kids is that instead of TV time they have to work with me!"

For more information call Yoni at Comics Express, phone/fax: 415627.

TO YOUR HEALTH

Stressed Out?

Dr. Shimon Matthews MD

Life in these modern times is characterized by a frantic pace, excessive stimulation, and pressure to perform a variety of complex and changing tasks. In a word - stress. Everyone agrees that this stress is a major cause of illness.

Epidemiological studies link high levels of stress with everything from insomnia, depression and anxiety, to headaches, ulcers, heart disease and even immune deficiency.

Western medicine recognizes a relation between stress and disease. But because stress is non-physical, it is difficult for Western doctors to understand the impact of stress on the body. We are left with a vague notion of psychosomatic illness, "It's all in the head," and little more than symptomatic treatment - sleeping pills, pain killers, etc. and advice to "relax."

Traditional Chinese Medicine (TCM) on the other hand, deals with the energy of the body. This system allows the effect of excessive, discordant energy stimulation (i.e., stress) on the smooth functioning of the body to be precisely understood, and treated at the point where the damage begins.

Migraine headaches are a specific example. According to TCM theory, energy flows in the body along channels called meridians. Each meridian originates in a different part of the body. The energy in one of the branches of the "liver" meridian, for example, flows into the eyes and head. Stress can easily disrupt the smooth flow along this meridian, causing a temporary blockage of energy to the eye, and then a reactionary explosion of energy to the sides or top of the head.

This is precisely the pathology of a migraine attack - first, a constriction of blood vessels, causing visual symptoms (the "aura" of ten observed, and associated with the start of a migraine headache), followed by an explosive dilation of the same vessels, which produces the headache pain. With acupuncture, thin stainless steel needles are used to strengthen and smooth the flow of bioelectric energy along the meridian, relieving the pain, while simultaneously stabilizing the system, making it more resistant to further stress.

It should be noted that no treatment can be permanently effective, in the face of ongoing stress. That is why TCM includes not only specific treatments (like acupuncture for migraine) but also exercise techniques (such as Tai Chi and Qi Gong) which relax the mind and body.

Dr. Shimon Matthews, MD, practices at the TCM Healthnet Center (Traditional Chinese Medicine). For more details, call TCM - Healthnet Center, 02-376366/7.
